Preface.

It is necessary to give some account of these Pedigrees, which I was asked to edit for the Harleian Society. They are the lifelong work of Mr. Arthur Staunton Larken, Richmond Herald, who died 1 April 1889. Genealogy had always had a strong fascination for him, and his taste was shared by his brother-in-law William John, 6th Lord Monson, who in 1828 had married his sister.

Both visited many parishes in Lincolnshire and made extracts from the parish registers; in fact the nucleus of these Pedigrees is in the library of Burton Hall.

Lord Monson had the useful gift of being able, after reading a will over a few times, to reproduce the chief substance in writing—a most useful gift in days when the slightest attempt to make notes of a will at Doctors' Commons was at once detected by vigilant officials, and when no Department of Literary Inquiry existed.

After the death of Lord Monson in 1863, Mr. Larken added largely to the list of pedigrees. He regularly "visited" Lincolnshire, making his headquarters at the larger country towns, and searching the parish registers in the neighbourhood.

The result is a large number of note-books filled with extracts of births, deaths, and marriages. He also, on the establishment of the Literary Inquiry Department at Somerset House, made copious abstracts of an immense number of wills.

On his appointment as Portcullis Pursuivant in 1878 he had, of course, enlarged facilities of search in the rich stores of the College of Arms. His previous labours now bore fruit. He was able to clothe, so to speak, the skeleton pedigrees with flesh by means of his parish register extracts and abstracts of wills. These Pedigrees are the result. The originals are now the property of the College of Arms, having been bought at Mr. Larken's death.

Some time previously, however, he had entertained the idea of printing them, and in 1874 a serious attempt was made. A large number of subscribers promised subscriptions to the amount, so far as I remember, of nearly £800.

In writing to me about that time he mentions his reluctance to give to the world what he did not consider was quite as perfect as he wished, but he was persuaded to publish what, after all, would be a most valuable genealogical work, even, to use his own phrase, "with all its imperfections on its head." He writes that his children are busy copying out the pedigrees for the printer.

The whole of letter A and nearly all B was printed, and then the undertaking collapsed for reasons which I need not enter into. It was a great disappointment to him and his friends, but the remaining years of his life were devoted to making the pedigrees more perfect. This copy, made for publication, came at last into the possession of Dr. George William Marshall, Rouge Croix, who has most kindly allowed the Harleian Society to publish it.

I must now, as Editor, say a few words about this copy which I undertook to edit. As I have said, letters A and B were in type, and copies of the pedigrees were sold to people who had a personal interest in them. The rest of the collection remained in manuscript, copied out in various hands.

In dealing with A and B I found it necessary to condense a good deal. Pedigrees had been drawn out to an inordinate length by giving the descents from heiresses, even when they had passed into other counties. A good deal of some of the pedigrees was simply what could be read in the "Peerage" and "Landed Gentry," and I struck it out, since the object of the Harleian Society is to print and publish what has hitherto been in manuscript. It would be a waste of time and money to print what could be found in books of reference within every one's reach.

But a far greater difficulty lay in the handwriting. Mr. Larken wrote a beautiful hand, and those pedigrees which he wrote out himself needed no correction. Not so with those copied by his children. There are four or five different kinds of writing, and it would puzzle any one to say which is the worst. The evil becomes a very serious one when dates are in question, and I found very soon that it was a constant matter of perplexity to decide whether a figure was 8, or 3, or 5.

The names of places in Lincolnshire I could, with the aid of a gazetteer and my own local knowledge, generally guess pretty accurately, but the names of places in other counties were continually stumbling-blocks. I have spent hours poring over maps to see if I could possibly identify a place which in the strange handwriting was a perfect problem. I very soon found that a personal visit to every parish register in the county would be necessary if absolute accuracy were demanded, and this of course was out of the question; and although Dr. Marshall and Mr. Everard Green were most kind in supplying information when I sought it, it was impossible to trespass unmercifully on their kindness, as I should have to have done had I appealed to them in every difficulty. I have therefore to plead that though numerous errors may be detected in these Pedigrees, I had no fair transcript to work upon, but various specimens of childish, unformed handwriting.

I was comforted, however, on finding in three instances that Mr. Larken's extracts from registers were singularly accurate. The registers of Great Grimsby and Horncastle are in print, and on comparing some of the extracts with them I was glad to find hardly a single mistake. The Rev. R. E. Cole, Rector of Doddington, who has made copious extracts from the Swinderby Register, has found also Mr. Larken's extracts relating to the Disney family quite correct.

But the badness of the handwriting landed me in another difficulty. It was strongly impressed upon me that there must be as few corrections as possible in the proofs, as they had to be paid for, and if not kept within bounds would seriously increase the cost of publication. There was only one way of solving the difficulty. I tried the experiment of sending one of the copied pedigrees with emendations of my own, and the result was a large number of necessary corrections. Obviously, then, it only remained for me to rewrite the worst-written pedigrees from beginning to end if I wished to ensure freedom from errors. But this has seriously impeded me and delayed the publication of the Volume. I am just sending letter G to the printer; out of thirty-seven pedigrees I have completely rewritten thirty-three. Members of the Harleian Society who may have been disposed to complain of the slowness with which this First Volume has been brought out, ought to remember this fact.

I have taken the liberty, besides condensing and altering, of introducing some pedigrees which were not in Mr. Larken's collection. I trust the Harleian Society will not think this unnecessary. The title of the Volume is "Lincolnshire Pedigrees," and Mr. Larken's list was not an exhaustive one. I may quote the Cheney pedigree as an instance in point.

During a residence in Lincoln of twenty-eight years I have had ample opportunities of searching the Lincoln Probate Office Wills, and have made abstracts of more than 3000. I have printed two volumes of them.

Out of these, with the aid of parish registers and the Transcripts in the Bishops' Registry and other materials, I have been able to put together many pedigrees, which, for want of a better word, I will call Familie Minorum Gentium. I cannot think these out of place. Let it be granted that they do not figure in the Heraldic Visitations; but surely genealogy does not stop at the year 1666, when the last Visitation of this county was attempted. After all, the families who appeared in the Visitation of 1634 were many of them in the ranks of the yeomanry in the preceding century; why, then, should yeoman families of the latter part of the seventeenth century be excluded who became "gentle" and "armigerous" in the eighteenth? I need not dwell on the fact that some of the non-visitation families were of the oldest standing in the county. Take for instance the Codd family. I have examined an enormous number of their wills, and it is interesting to mark how almost invariably the testators in early times were living in two parishes side by side in the north of the county—Harpwell and Hemswell—never rising above the rank of well-to-do yeomen: giving a Mayor to Lincoln in 1500; later on spreading over adjacent parishes; planting a branch in County Meath in Ireland in the seventeenth century; finally in the eighteenth becoming gentry. The Brownes of Corringham found no place in Mr. Larken's list, and it was the fortunate circumstance of discovering an old chest of "useless papers" in a lawyer's office that enabled me to give the pedigree. The Andrews, Gace, Greathed, Mottram, and other families, all possessing landed estates in the seventeenth century, would have had to be excluded had the rule of admitting none but "Visitation families" been rigidly observed.

I have said that I have omitted a great deal of what was already in print, but it was very difficult to be perfectly consistent. Where was the line to be drawn? I decided that those pedigrees which were printed in the "Genealogist" and the "Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica" need not be reprinted, as they practically incorporated Mr. Larken's work; but there were several which, though they had been to a large extent printed, yet had been greatly improved by Mr. Larken's extracts from parish registers. These I thought it better to print. Then, again, though some had indeed been printed, yet the books in which they were to be found were often of limited circulation. The question arose, then, whether it would not be better to reprint them.

Lodge's "History of Scrivelsby" in its second edition contains a full pedigree of the Dymoke family, largely supplied by Mr. Larken's collections. I was doubtful whether to reprint it. But in the case of Burke's "Peerage and Baronetage" and his "Landed Gentry" there could be no doubt, as these books are within the reach of every one who wishes to consult them.

The Disney pedigree is very fully given in Volume II. of the "Visitations of Essex," printed by the Harleian Society, but Mr. Larken had greatly improved it by his copious extracts from the Swinderby and other registers, so I did not omit it. On the other hand, the Cust pedigree has been so elaborately worked out by Lady Elizabeth Cust in her "Records of the Cust Family" that it seemed useless to rewrite it.

I may now briefly state the principal sources from which these pedigrees were compiled. Of course, the framework of most of them is to be found in the great Lincolnshire Visitation of 1634 in the College of Arms, MS. C. 23. Two previous Visitations in 1562 and 1592 had been held, and these were published in the "Genealogist" many years ago, and reprinted under the editorship of Mr. C. Metcalfe in 1881 and 1882. The last Visitation of Lincolnshire was held in 1666. This also is in the College of Arms, MS. D. 23.

Mr. Larken, having access to all four Visitations, had a splendid groundwork ready to hand, but this alone would have been insufficient. Every genealogist knows how untrustworthy Visitation pedigrees often are; how frequently it is discovered that a man in producing his pedigree for the inspection of the Heralds forgot his near kindred, and even in some cases misnamed them.

Mr. Larken, with his ample stores of abstracts of wills, post-mortem inquisitions, and extracts from parish registers, was enabled to correct mistakes and fill up what had before been a meagre outline.

The changes through which the leading Lincolnshire families passed between 1562 and 1666 are very great. The fifteenth century, with its terrible civil war, had indeed broken up the old feudal nobility, and the merchants of the Staple, under the patronage of Edward IV. and Henry VII., had come to the front when the sixteenth century began; but the reign of Elizabeth was peculiarly favourable to the development of trade and commerce, and it is impossible not to note the rise of families hitherto unknown into the ranks of country gentry. A glance at the Visitation of 1562 and another at that of 1634 will illustrate my meaning. The number of gentlemen who came forward to shew their pedigrees in 1634 is enormously in excess of those in 1562. Other causes contributed. The suppression of the monasteries had thrown a vast amount of land into the market, and there were plenty of gentlemen ready to purchase on easy terms, and plenty of yeomen and merchants who had grown rich and were anxious to place their money in the only available investment—land.

Had the Visitation of 1666 been cordially welcomed, it would have been extremely interesting to have marked the influx of new families, for the convulsion of the Civil War had wrought almost as great a change as the Wars of the Roses and the Suppression of the Monasteries had done. Parliamentary families, who had bought up the estates of their impoverished Royalist neighbours and then made agreement with their adversaries by joining with them in restoring the Monarchy, came out of the struggle with increased rent-rolls and a corresponding increase of social status. But a Heraldic Visitation was felt to be an anachronism after the Commonwealth. Knight service and other relics of feudalism had been abolished. Comparatively few families attended at the summons of Bysshe, Clarenceux King-at-Arms, and very few of these represented old historic names. The Visitation was a failure.

From 1666 to the end of the eighteenth century is, of course, a blank as regards genealogy, but the Lists of Sheriffs for the county to some extent reveal the steady rise of new families. Thus the Brownes of Saltfleetby, who had been simply yeomen in the early part of the seventeenth century, had a Sheriff in their family in 1670, and another in 1698.

Henry Andrews, who was Sheriff in 1728, belonged to a family that had hardly emerged from the yeomanry. Coney Tunnard, Sheriff in 1737, was a solicitor. St. John Wells, Sheriff in 1738, was a prosperous tanner. These are sufficient indications that the old order was changing.

These newer families are surely not uninteresting. I have already said that I have introduced some of them into this Volume, and I can only hope they will not be looked upon as unauthorized intruders.

At the risk of being tedious, I should like to say something about Lincolnshire and the leading families that played some part in its history. Few counties are richer in genealogical materials, and few have received so little attention till within the last twenty years. The Record Office has a rich mine of genealogical wealth which has been but little worked.

Lincolnshire, almost more than any other county, was subjected to sub-division. This becomes very apparent when the immense number of small manors is taken into account. No one would be surprised to find large parishes containing more than one manor, but it is remarkable how often a comparatively small one is sub-divided.

Take for instance Great Steeping. The parish only contains 1685 acres—nothing wonderful beside the great parishes of Gedney, Spalding, and others—but there are no less than three distinct manors: the manor of Great Steeping, the manor of Kelsey Hall, and the manor of Monksthorpe.

Lincolnshire is considered the largest county in England next to Yorkshire, but it is remarkable how few families still survive in the male line that can be found possessed of landed estates in the time of Henry VII. It was said that the estates in the Home Counties changed hands more rapidly than those in remoter parts owing to the propinquity of London, where wealthy merchants were ready to buy land as an investment; but in Lincolnshire, which in days before railroads was extremely remote, estates have been so often sold or transmitted through heiresses, that very few families now exist who can shew their descent unbroken in the male line from possessors of their estates in the reign of Henry VII. They are these:—

The Langtons, who undoubtedly possessed Langton in the thirteenth century; the Heneages, who were living at Hainton in the fourteenth; the Dymokes, who held Scrivelsby by Grand Serjeanty in the reign of Richard II.; the Thorolds, who acquired Marston by marriage in the fourteenth century; the Smyths, who had property in Elkington early in the following one; and, most remarkable of all, the Custs, who, although not an “armigerous” family (for their first grant of arms was made in the seventeenth century), yet undoubtedly have possessed land in Pinchbeck from the thirteenth century down to the present day, as may be read in Lady Elizabeth’s record of the race.

Of the families which still continue in the male line, although their early estates have passed away by sale or marriage, there are the Monsous, who parted with property that had come down to them from the fifteenth century in 1834; the Massingberds, possessed of land in Lincolnshire as early as the reign of Edward I., but now represented in the male line by the Rev. William Oswald Massingberd, Rector of South Ormsby, whose “History of Ormsby” is a model of what such a book should be, while the branches at Ormsby and Gunby have only female descent; the Whichcotes of Aswarby, dating from the time of Henry VI., when they acquired Harpswell by marriage with a Tyrwhit heiress, but before then seated in Shropshire (Harpswell still belongs to them, but they only gained it by marriage with the heiress of the elder line in the eighteenth century); the Maddisons, who in the seventeenth century parted with property they had acquired by marriage and purchase in the fifteenth and sixteenth; the Craerofts, who held the manor of Craeroft Hall in Hogsthorpe as early as the fourteenth century, though their present estates only came to them in the early part of the seventeenth. These families still survive in the unbroken male line in Lincolnshire, the sole remnants of the knightly and gentle proprietors of the fifteenth century.

It would take too long to recount the names of those families that have become extinct, or have left the county, or have dwindled down into insignificance. A few may be mentioned: The great race of Bussy, whose glory enluminated in the reign of Richard II. and then decayed; the Tyrwhits, once so powerful in the county, but now, though still surviving in the direct male line, no longer in it, and possessing none of the ancient property; the Copledikes, who quarrelled with them in the reign of Henry VIII.; the Billesbys of Billesby (now spelt Bilsby); the Meres of Kirton in Holland, in all probability a branch of the great Ros or Roos house, bearing arms which are clearly an adaptation of the arms of that Baronial family; the Skipwiths of South Ormsby, whose history may be found in Mr. Massingberd's book already referred to; the Newcomens, as old a family as any in Lincolnshire, spreading into numerous branches, including a Baronetcy in Ireland, but now all gone to extinction or at least oblivion; the Angevines, who came in with the race of Plantagenet of Anjou; the Bleasbys of Bleasby, the Asfordbys of Asfordby, the Towthbys of Towthby, the Moignes of North Willingham, and last, but not least, the great Ayscough family, representing the Talboys of Stallingborough and the Hansards of South Kelsey; and the Husseys, who received a fatal blow in the execution and attainder of Lord Hussey in the rising, which was the prelude to the Pilgrimage of Grace, in 1536. These and many others must be sought, to use Lord Chief Justice Crewe's eloquent words, "in the urns and sepulchres of mortality."
